Culture and Experience

By cortezhill

Concerned both with theory and methodology, this volume represents the essence of Professor Hallowell's point of view in cultural anthropology and furnishes a rich collection of examples of his methods. He has made extensive use of Rorschach and TAT tests in his field work, and he has particularly drawn upon psychological concepts to analyze his data. Because it provides a wealth of material on both the similarities and differences in personality structure in contrasting primitive and civilized societies, Culture And Experience should be of the greatest interest not only to the anthropologist, but also to the practicing psychologist and the student engaged in research throughout the social sciences.
